

fluorochemical excellence
shaping the future

Blowing Agents

Hydrogen fluoride is used in the production of fluorinated hydrocarbons which are used as foam blowing agents for a range of plastics like polyurethane and polystyrene, to improve their insulating properties for use in domestic and industrial appliances such as refrigerators, cooling plants, cold storage rooms, food processing equipment and packaging materials.