

fluorochemical excellence
shaping the future

Diamonds

Hydrofluoric acid is used in a digestion process for geological surveys and to recover fine fractions of diamonds from concentrates mostly used for industrial tools. Hydrofluoric acid is also used to remove adsorbed impurities from rough diamond surfaces and crevices converting a dull coffee brown appearance into a shiny diamond of higher value to the mine.